A report that the Paoshan Magistrate has been ordered to obtain a list of the employes of the railway is the only straw we have able to hear of that could help to show the direction of the wind. As matters stand, however, in four days more the final justalment of the purchase money will have to be paid, and unless some new arrangement is made, the engines will we presame be run into the sheds and left there.-

An extraordinary story reaches us respecting that extraordinary being, M. Paris, who, as our readers are aware, has got into his head that he should be the Emperor of China. He recently determined to proceed to Peking, to take possession of his throne, having made arrangements to send for a countryman directly he was settled to act as his prime minister. He started up river, taking with him ten Chinamen; and at lected a favourable stand he commenced, but so remarkable were his words, that he was arrested, odged in a gaol, and narrowly escaped being deprived of his head. The anthorities, however, bothought themselves that it would be safer to communicate with the French Consul, and ultimately he was handed over to that gentleman. By him he was sent down to Shanghai, and now he is being taken care of preparatory to his denortation. What has become of his Chinese at tondants we are not informed.—Courier.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

LONDON, 13th September, 1877 CURRENT TOPICS.

The war in the East and the unsatisfactory osition of foreign politics place domestic quesions in the shade. The Queen is enjoying herself in Scotland, the Prince of Wales is attending to the court duties the harvest is but middling trade is bad money is chesp the revenue returns are good, and that is about the sum and substance of everything stirring hore. THE RUSSO TURKISH WAR.

As for the Eastern Question, its compliantions, ramifications, and entanglements become worse and worse day by day, and I am much afraid that a general European war must be the inevitable result. In order to explain my mean. ing I must, in the first place, attempt to show the position of affairs between the Turk and the Muscovite. Beginning in Asia Minor, the Ruscian and Ottonian forces are simply haggling at. anch other to provent reinfercoments heine annt to the scene of strife in Bulgaria. Thousands are being slain simply in pursuonce of this policy. The season is so far advanced and the resources of each combatant are so much exhausted that nothing but wanton destruction of life is even aimed at Proceeding westward we come to the Dobrudscho, the eastern extremity of the Danubian buttlefield. There the Russians have a large army under General Zimmerman, whose duty it is to prevent the Turks orossing the Danube and destroying the Roumanian railways, whereby the Russians draw their supplies. Should the Russians abandon this position their communications would be cut off, whilst should the Turks abandon it the Russians would attack the dank of the Turkish Quadrilateral.

Thus the opposing forces produce the san result as two negatives in English according to in our view that the disease had obtained no local Lindley Mutray. Proceeding farther east we come to the Turkish Quadralateral, which rema paratively small; the competition has been so procautions that have very generally and very undisturbed in all its integrity until we reach considerably reduced, that I am not at all sure wisely been instituted, the place will remain safe. Rustohuk, on the Danuba. West of that run with the parent stream, namely, the Lom and the but hitherto apparently without cause. It is Jantra, both banks of both streams having been nothing more than natural to suppose that, with occupied by the Russians, who have penetrated a cholera and violent diarrhora prevailing at long way back even unto Tirnova. And here-Kagoshima the return of the troops would be abouts it is that the main army of the invaders has been concentrated. The Russians obtained the occupancy so easily that, not content with Tirnova they crossed the Halkans, and, capturing steamers arrived on Sunday last, and altogether the Shipka Pass, arranged to hold-it-permanently. The Turks occupying Plevna, far to the west of the Russian area of occupation, entirely foiled the Russian plans, it being clear that the Muscovite army could not cross the Balkans whilst a large Turkish force was operating on its flanks. The Turks attempted to cross the Balkans from the south and drive the Russiana out of the Shipka Pass, the idea being that their army south of the Balkans under Suleiunn Pasha would, if successful, be enabled either to reinforce; the army at Plevna or to harms the Russians who had had the temerity to spize and held Tirnovn. It became as plain as daylight that the Russians could do nothing until the Turkish force at Plevna should be driven away, and, as all the world knows, the Muscovitenttack on this position ended in a deplorable disaster. It then became a question with the Russians of the seizure of Plevna or irreparable rain, and the Turks accepted a comical being the case of a very well-known the Shipka Pass was attacked so vigorously and keeper of a native hotel and restaurant. It defended so obstinately. Anyhow the Turks seems that on one of the first evenings after the were sectohed and the Russians, by a clever panic bad set in he spent rather a convivial manœuvre, took Lovatz, which lies between the Shipka and Plevon, for be it understood that for opening in the morning, the servants were although Sulaiman could not drive the Russians. unable to wake him, and argued that he must be out of the Pass he did succeed in driving them into their entrenchments, and he could by availing himself of another Pass hold them in their entrenchments and at the same time augment police, who stationed a man at the house which the Plevna garrison, but the Russian occupation remained shut up to prevent people going in of Levatz checkmated him and left the Plevus

EXTRACTS MY BOOKS. have a few of varied sort. And some are sad, some full of sport, Some rife with love that's antique. Some lead me with a gondle hand O'er mountain top through many a land, And 'cross the wild Atlantic.

If I am sad they bring me joy, Their laughter leaves no cold alloy; Each book is like a brother; Here, friends we sit, and chat, and sing, And which the brightest thought shall bries They vie with orie another.

Some tell me tales so strange and wild. I wotever tike a little child. If all is true they're telling. Ji'd, true or false, I'll let it go, For there they stand a goodly row, With not one face repelling.

What matter though the Bank may smasi. And earthquake swallow all the cash. .. And ruin round me flutter If these my friends are left me still, I'll colmly tetter down the hill Of life, and never mutter.

Grin discontent or heavy groan That all the goody-goods are gone, Which I had hold as prizes: Though rough the blow, and hard my lot, Still happy in the friends I've got-These friends wear no disguises.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES OF

M. THEIRS. I happened to be brought into intimate communication with him for the first time (says a correspondent of the Daily Telegraph) soon after the Commune, when he reigned in the Préfecture of Versailles. He was at that moment the most popular man in France. He had just freed the metropolis from the most dangerous insurrection of modern times, and he kept high court in the imposing edifice which the Empire had built for one of its subordinate employes, a The reception rooms of the Préfecture were thronged every night, but the President maintained intact the Republican simplicity of his patriarchal habits. An inveterate worker himself, he had no sympathy for those who were incapable of his labours. He literally tired out all who were in attendance upon him. He always rose at four o'clock, worked incessantly all day with the exception of the two hours before his dinner, and these he devoted to sleep undressing and going to bed. But in the evening he was as lively and active as though he bore no burden on his shoulders. He frequently, when any important measure through the night. But he never showed was to be brought forward, worked right any symptom of weariness or exhaustion. He did not drink either tea or coffee, but made his first meal of a basin of soup, his usual beverage consisted of specially good Bordeaux copiously diluted with water. The indomitable energy and the intense ambition of Thiers rendered him absolutely unsusceptible of fatigue. No task was too great in amusing, though annoying, acquaint- keen idea of personal dignity.
